In an effort to protect LGBTQ (lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer) individuals from discrimination and harassment, high schools, colleges, and universities throughout the U.S. have adopted policies that address issues related to transgender- and queer-identified persons, including those who identify as “non-binary” or “gender-fluid” that are outside the “male-female binary.”

Consequently, a new generation is entering the workforce that is accustomed to both the protections that come with such policies and a culture of awareness about these identities. At the same time, there are many others in the workforce who may have very little exposure or awareness of these identities.

Peak Compliance Training has developed training that is designed to help employers bridge this gap and avoid discrimination and harassment of LGBTQ employees.

Peak offers a perpetual license to use this 15-minute training across the entire organization and a variety of ways to deploy it, including:

- Email delivery
- Through your Intranet
- Printed distribution
- Through a Learning Management System
- New Hire Training
- And more

Customization options are available.
